ACTIVITIES FOR VISITORS TO NORWAY

Norway offers some truly remarkable ways to explore the great outdoors

A Ride a snowmobile

For many who live in Northern Norway, the snowmobile is an everyday means of transport – and nothing less than a lifeline for those in more remote areas. But these vehicles are also great fun to ride and snowmobile excursions are one of the most popular tourist experiences. It's a thrill indeed to roar in convoy through a landscape of wooden trails on the Arctic's answer to a Harley-Davidson motorbike. _____11_____ The only controls to worry about are a thumb operated throttle* and motorcycle-style brake**. All riders are equipped with a helmet, warm waterproof overalls, boots and gloves, and given comprehensive safety instructions. Scores of outfits throughout the region offer snowmobile excursions, from half-day taster sessions to expeditions of up to a week.

B Go fishing on a frozen surface

Fishing through a hole in the ice may seem like the Arctic cliché. Many people from Europe's warmer climates may think it is something that exists only in old footage of Eskimo living, but this isn't the case at all. Under the frozen surface, many of Norway's freshwater lakes and fjords are full of fish and there are plenty of enthusiasts who spend their days catching them. Sign up for an excursion and you'll find out how the experts use the auger* to drill through the ice, a skimming loop to keep the water from freezing over again and a familiar rod to catch the fish. _____12_____ Some companies offer fishing trips that last three days or more and involve snowmobile or dog-sled journeys up to remote mountain lakes.

C Go skiing or snowshoeing***

Snowmobile has high-octane attractions, but to understand fully the stillness and peace of the mountains, it's best to use your own feet to get around. There are several ways of doing this. Cross-country skiing is among the most popular Nordic pastimes and there are thousands of miles of trails. A few lessons are important to pick up the basics of the technique. _____13_____ Younger explorers will find plenty of opportunities for snowboarding fun. A calmer manner of exploration is on snowshoes. The racquet- like footwear makes it possible to run over deep snow. A classic snowshoe safari involves a guided walk to a forest glade**, where snacks are served.

D Try dog sledding

Before the invention of the petrol engine, dog sleds were vital to those who lived inside the Arctic Circle, and a trip to a husky farm is something every visitor to northern Norway should experience. Half- or full – day sled safaris are most popular, although overnight and longer tours are also available. Norwegians treat dog sledding as a sport and regularly take part in prestigious races. It's difficult not to feel excited as a team of huskies is harnessed to* your sledge. The instinct to run is so strong in the dogs that whenever they realize an outing is inevitable, they become as excited as domestic pets about to be taken for walkies – howling, leaping in the air and straining at their leashes. _____14_____ Dog sledding is available through various companies at different locations in northern Norway and is suitable for beginners, though you should be reasonably fit.

E Bathe in the Barents Sea

The Barents Sea is the part of the Arctic Ocean that lies north of Norway and Russia, and although the North Atlantic Drift keeps it ice-free through the year, its temperature seldom rises much above freezing point. So it might be imagined that bathing in the extremely cold waters would be at best masochistic and at worst suicidal, but with the right equipment you can swim not far from the coast of Finnmark. _____15_____ It will allow you to float and paddle around to your heart's content. In Kirkenes, bathing in the Barents Sea is often combined with a king crab safari – the experience bringing new meaning to the phrase “cold appetizer”.
